

Susan Eisenhower is President of the Eisenhower Group, Inc, which provides strategic counsel on political, business and public affairs projects. She also is a Distinguished Fellow of the Eisenhower Institute, where she served as both president and chair. In the foreign affairs field, she is best known for her work in Russia and the former Soviet Union. She has also been appointed to the National Academy of Sciences' standing Committee on International Security and Arms Control (CISAC) where she is now serving a fourth term. In 2000, a year before September 11, she co-edited a book, Islam and Central Asia, which carried the prescient subtitle, An Enduring Legacy or an Evolving Threat?

Ms. Eisenhower has served on many government task forces. In the spring of 2000, the Secretary of Energy appointed Ms. Eisenhower to a blue ribbon task force, the Baker-Cutler Commission, to evaluate U.S. funded nuclear non-proliferation programs in Russia. In the fall of 2001, after serving two terms on the NASA Advisory Council she was appointed to serve on the International Space Station Management and Cost Evaluation Task Force, which analyzed ISS management and cost overruns. She is currently a member of the Secretary of Energy's Task Force on Nuclear Energy. She has also served as an Academic Fellow of the International Peace and Security program of Carnegie Corporation of New York, and is a director of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the Nuclear Threat Initiative, co-chaired by Senator Sam Nunn and Ted Turner.

Ms. Eisenhower's first professional experience was as a writer. Within the last ten years, she has authored three books and edited four collected volumes on regional security issues, most recently, Partners in Space (2004). She has also penned hundreds of opinion pieces and articles on foreign policy, and appeared on CNN International and many other television and radio news programs.
